

KLOVE is a ministry to me personally and to the community as a whole. Its music is positive and is family-building. It is the one station that can be accessed in Austin, TX about which parents need not worry with regards to language, advertisements or stupid stunts by radio hosts. Thousands of people each year make positive changes in their lives just by listening to KLOVE (for many of these, it means that they give their lives to Christ). I teach at a Christian school, and my students say that if it were not for KLOVE, they would have no positive, "cool" witnessing tool for their friends. Candle 88 has been a poor public steward to the community and it should be removed from the air, if any. Without KLOVE, Candle 88 is what youth would have left. KLOVE pulled me out of a deep depression after I lost my grandmother, uncle and aunt last year within a two month span. I then moved to Austin, TX two weeks later. Soon as I got into my rental car, I searched for KLOVE. I found it and a praise song that was sung at two of the funerals was on the radio. I took it as a sign that the Lord wanted me in Austin, that everything would be okay. I am certain that you will receive thousands of these emails. Read them seriously. Consider the effects that KLOVE's removal would have on the community. Do we really need another station with trendy music, long commercials, full of juvenile stunts all to win $10? Unlike those stations, KLOVE has eternal significance on lives. The decision about to be made is a weighty one.
